They're opting for products like detergent, shampoo and cat food that are made from environmentally friendly materials that can be reused and/or recycled. And as consumers become increasingly savvy about what they put into their own bodies and on their clothes and skin, the disposable plastic packaging is starting to fall by the wayside. We just received a patent for plastic food containers and plastic laundry detergent containers that are biodegradable. It's just amazing when you think about the concept. You're going to find it in the gutter in a few years. You're going to find it in the garden in a few years. It's going to be gone. I'm so proud of our company because you won't find that stuff anywhere else. BOTTOM LINE Companies should start thinking and work with the environment to design new packaging materials that can be used in the marketplace and by consumers.I just completed my second round of sleuthin'. I have discovered 4 more "clues" hidden in the current season of Dexter. Let's take a look! A sports writer gives a new interview to The Miami Herald newspaper with the season 5 premiere of Dexter looming on the horizon. Dexter speaks with the newspaper about the upcoming episodes, mentioning a famous football player he will try to find in an upcoming episode. As seen below, the newspaper mentions that Daniel "Boogaloo" Edwards is the player Dexter is searching for. Dexter's busy this week, as he and his crew are trying to find Boogaloo. They end up following a running suspect in an attempt to identify Boogaloo. Dexter learns that the suspect, Theven, is actually a reporter at The Miami Herald. He begins to try to find out more about Theven, only to discover that he has a wife and young son. Dexter realizes that Theven's wife and son could be in serious danger, as they may be about to blow his cover. Dexter continues to investigate
