It is like the regular Photoshop but it is free and less expensive, while keeping the best features. Photoshop Elements is not recommended for image editing professionals. The free version, though good enough for a hobbyist, is often limited when it comes to editing advanced features and editing huge files. This guide will detail how you can quickly and easily edit images in the Elements version of Photoshop. How to Edit Images in Photoshop Elements Image | Edit | Edit Style | Effect 1. Open image Click on the file you wish to edit in the list and select Edit > Open. Tip: To make your work faster you can group related images in a folder and give the group a common name. 2. Select Effects > Adjust Color > Levels Click on the Adjust Color icon and choose Levels. You will see the Levels dialog. You can use the following controls: Name | Select from three numerical scales: Average, Minimum, and Maximum. Levels | Select an option between Auto, 100%, and 200%. This is the easiest way to correct red, green, and blue if an image has a color cast. 3. Select Effects > Adjust Color > Curves Click on the Adjust Color icon and choose Curves. This is a little more complicated than the previous method. This tool replaces the RGB levels with a complex image adjustment called a "curve". The leftmost column represents the RGB values of the color. The bottom part of the image represents the intensity of the color. The middle line represents the brightness. The top part of the image is the hue or color. In this example, the most common way to correct this is to drag the leftmost column up or down. The intensity will increase or decrease as a result. Tip: Change the color to black and white and try adjusting the curves. 4. Select Effects > Adjust Color > Color Dodge Click on the Adjust Color icon and choose Color Dodge. The effect is similar to the Levels or Curves tool. The difference is that this tool looks at the edges of pixels instead of the middle of the pixel. 5. Select Effects > Adjust Color > Posterize Click on the Adjust Color icon and choose Posterize. This tool converts a color image into a grayscale one. 6. Select Effects > Adjust Color > Tint Click 05a79cecff

Life History Data Collection in a Multinational Study of Natural Populations of a Migratory Bird. We present a description of an interdisciplinary field study of the predator-prey interactions in a migratory bird, the red-winged blackbird (Agelaius phoeniceus), that was conducted in Eastern North America and Great Britain (Figure 1). This paper describes collection of data about behavior and survival, energy allocation, nutrition, and movement. In addition, we describe the methods by which we were able to determine morphological and internal body characteristics of adult birds. In this study, we decided to monitor birds on two continents to study potential differences in the ecology of two countries because migration typically limits connectivity between populations of blackbirds, thus, a multidisciplinary approach was used to understand population dynamics. We collected data about the abundance, distribution, and reproductive rates of the birds in a residential neighborhood in King County, WA, USA, and in South Somerset, England. We monitored bird abundance and distributions daily and counted the number of eggs in nests. We also made monthly visits to both sites from October-March to track offspring from nests and to collect newly hatched, newly fledged, and adult birds for subsequent morphometric and blood sample analysis. Daily monitoring included collecting all captured birds for measurements and blood sampling in the spring of 2008 and in the fall of 2008 in the United States (Figure 2) and in 2010 in Great Britain (Figure 3). Daily data collected included bird weight, age, wing chord length, and tarsus length. Body condition was assigned a 0-4 scale, where 5 was the most well-conditioned and 0 was the most emaciated. In total, we collected 3388 feathers and 1706 blood samples from 688 birds in the United States (Figure 2) and 212 blood samples from 56 birds in Great Britain (Figure

3). Birds were recaptured and weighed at different stages of development. Mean temperatures for the sites were 7.2 °C for the Northwest and 10.3 °C for the South England (Figure 2, Figure 3). In this paper, we also report all ecomorphological characteristics of birds that were taken at capture (2011-2014). We caught birds by using funnel traps in an urban setting. Capture events were timed between dawn and dusk. Birds were caught individually and returned to the site where they were caught. Birds were ringed, weighed, and measured. Most of the measurements are currently available in the US Department of Interior, Fish and Wildlife
