Writer's block. I'm not really sure what to make of it. It's when you write a paragraph, the next time you try to write a paragraph, you stare at the blank screen and have no idea where to begin, or what to write. It's a word you never want to see in a headline, but now it comes to me when I least expect it. Unrelenting, it won't let you write. It's different, though, than not being able to write at all. For me, not being able to write at all will eventually get you out of bed and to your computer. But writer's block can last longer. You sit at your desk, but words won't come. You get in your car and drive, but you'll find yourself coming up empty, with nothing to say. I think writer's block is a combination of something else: time. It's easy to sit and stare at a blank screen for hours, as I have on occasion. More than that, I think it's the waiting. When you're in the process of writing, you're time-travelling. You're there. You're now. Your characters may be playing chess, or beating each other to a pulp, but you're here. You're at your desk, looking at a blank screen. But you're not. You're somewhere else. This is the case with writer's block. It's when you're at a story, the very essence of a story, and everything else becomes meaningless. Writing is an act of self-creation, an act of creation. It's not about imitation. You're not writing something. You're writing something you create. An act of creation. And when you're at that story, the only thing that matters is you writing the next sentence, the next paragraph, and you don't care where you end up. All you want is to go back to the beginning and write again. Maybe that's why I write in the first place. So you get lost in the story, lost in the world, so much so that you can't come back to reality. So much so that even staring at a blank screen isn

Photo-Electrochemical Immunoassay Based on Copper-Coated Polymer Electrode Coupled with the Localized Surface Plasmon Resonance Nanozyme. As a kind of novel nanomaterials, the localized surface plasmon resonance (LSPR) sensors have excellent characteristic of sensitive and high selectivity due to their size and localized surface plasmon effect. The LSPR sensor has been successfully applied to the detection of small molecules by label-free method. However, it has seldom been combined with the biotin-avidin immunoassay which is a common method for molecular detection because the LSPR sensor has been used for label-free, homogeneous immunoassays. Herein, we presented a photo-electrochemical immunoassay based on LSPR sensor with the emerging Cu-coated polypyrrole film as the immuno-film, which was useful to constructing a photo-electrochemical immunoassay. The immuno-film was immobilized onto the surface of the glassy carbon electrode (GCE) and then acted as the base for the photochemical reaction of the copper complex. Meanwhile, a photo-irradiation method was used to excite the electron donor. The electron donor was reduced to the electron acceptor, and the electrochemical assay was realized based on the electrochemical oxidation of electrochemical probe in the solution. Based on this design, a photo-electrochemical immunoassay was realized based on the Cu-coated photo-electrochemical immuno-film to achieve a high sensitivity, specificity, and short assay time. Under optimal conditions, the copper-coated photo-electrochemical immuno-film achieved a limit of detection of 0.22 ng/mL for human IgG. And the immuno-assay was successfully applied to the detection of human IgG in human serum and human IgG spiked-in milk with the recoveries of 83-108%. Therefore, the immunoassay provides a new method for trace detection of biotin-avidin immunoassay, and has potential applications in the fields of clinical diagnosis, environmental monitoring and food safety.Knowledge, attitude and practice of Chinese population regarding pepsinogen testing. Pepsinogen test is routinely used for screening gastric cancer. In this study, we investigate the knowledge, attitudes and practices on pepsinogen testing among Chinese population.
