If your ship with a full-equipped crew sails in the Universe with a serious goal, there will be no land, just an empty waste of space. If you were born in a time when the galaxy was populated, and you watched with great interest news of a dark star, which is slowly approaching the Earth in the speed of 600 000 kilometres per hour, you will probably understand that something needs to be done. Fortunately, you are not alone. Your worthy neighbours left their tombs on the Earth. With you on a ship, you have the opportunity to develop yourself, to gain experience and to explore. And what a rich and dynamic Universe it is! Whatever your ambition may be, you will fulfill it, and your friend will bring you back to the Earth. This is our game! A: I've been working on a game with a similar idea, and found the following, interesting sources: Space Universe is a project for game engine written in C#/C++ with usage of Direct3D, XNA,... Rogue Stars is a similar game, but focused on space combat I wish you success! From the Bear Creek Rainforest in the Western Ghats of Kerala. According to legend, a group of animals was stuck in an area where a man had chained the soul of his wife and also hung the body of his brother. When the astrologer took the help of the local artisans to resolve their issues, the answer was to bring the soul of the woman which was stuck to the house, for just reason the fish was released. Thus was formed a column of stalactites. SpaceX is planning to load more cargo on the International Space Station later this year, according to Friday's edition of Space News. The firm said that it plans to ship around 130,000 pounds of supplies to the station in the December - January timeframe. The mission, dubbed Dragon 2, would also mark the firm's first launch to the space station since the explosion that rendered its first vessel unusable in June of last year. Of the 130,000 pounds of cargo, about 25,000 are meals, 13,500 pounds are science experiments, and the remainder is the station's workshop. And if you think that's a lot of stuff, you're not alone: SpaceX planned on launching 10 Dragon 2s at a time, but only managed to launch two of them due to the upcoming cargo launch to the ISS. The first

JAPANESE dispensing head is directed to provide a spray of the liquid being dispensed. The spray may be a fan or jet of liquid or a needle spray which is generated by a jet emitted from the end of a hollow needle or a hollow tube. The spray is most often aimed at the user's face or in front of the user. The spray can be directed at a non-user or to attempt to remove dust, dirt or oil from a surface. Many of the existing dispensing heads employ hand held sprayers or sprayers mounted on a pole or wall-mounted. Such sprayers can be easily knocked over or misaimed and are not particularly suitable for use with paints, varnishes and ad

ets Coeus Planets is a group of minor planets which are the remnants of a collisional family. The group was discovered in November 1982 by Robert G. Trafton and was named after the god of upper space in ancient Greek mythology. Asteroids number 672 and 673, discovered on 18 and 25 August 1981, were the first and second members of the group, respectively. The overall parent body has a diameter of and an albedo of. Introduction In a binary collision, the size of the impactor and the target are sometimes similar (as is the case for the Trojan asteroid 672 Tethys), so that even the secondaries (the asteroids 672 and 673 in this case) will eventually be ejected. This scenario explains the moderate size of the surviving impactor (the albedo is 0.0249, which is about half than that of the central object), and the high eccentricity of its orbit. The objects of the Coeus family exhibit a rather good mean-motion resonances with the inner planets Jupiter and Saturn, a feature not observed in other families. Because of the late discovery of the Coeus group, the scientific community quickly rushed to identify other interesting binary asteroid families. At the IC230 conference, held in 1997, about 26 binary systems were recognized, that explains why the discovery by Trafton and his colleagues was considered interesting in the beginning. Characteristics The mean orbital distances are about 1.11 AU, 1.18 AU, and 1.00 AU (3.0 In 2 rad). The spectra of the objects are poorly characterized. The median rotational velocities of the NEOs in this group are 21 km/s. The surfaces of the members are assumed to be locally pure in chondritic material, resulting in a black appearance (as shown for 676 Tethys). Physical properties The members of the Coeus family have large eccentricities. 673 Tethys is a binary asteroid, as is 676 Tethys. The least-massive member (2.945×10^{20} kg) of the Coeus group contains of mostly carbonaceous material, and is the object with the most abundant fines. About 0.17% of the mass is represented by metallic iron. Origin The average diameter of the surviving bodies in a binary collision is about and results to be a characteristic member of this family
