A dynamic combat system with 3 stages, where different attacks, summons and skills are used at every levelQ: How to roll back after CRUD operations? I have an entity, let's call it EntityA. It has a relationship with EntityB. I have created a JpaRepository for EntityA. When I issue a command like: A.findAll(); A.save(); B.save(); Is it possible to roll back all the changes made to EntityA and EntityB? I would like to achieve this without too much code in my program. I believe it should be something like this:

A.save()
B.findByA(A.getId())
B.save()

A: You are looking for the findAndModify method provided by JpaRepository. Find and modify an entity. This method allows you to retrieve the entity and modify its properties. You can use the method in two modes:

- modify mode:

JpaRepository repo = // create the repository MyEntity
entity = repo.findAndModify(entityId);
entity.setProp1("new value");
entity.setProp2("new value");
repo.save(entity);
- find mode:

JpaRepository repo = // create the repository MyEntity
updatedEntity = repo.find(entityId);
updatedEntity.setProp1("new value");
updatedEntity.setProp2("new value");
repo.save(updatedEntity);

FindAndModify is an extension of the find and save c9d1549cdd

What's new:

of the Year 2017 There's no disputing that the Collectible Card Game industry has been a massive success over the past few years. The market is now valued at $240m and is continuing to grow at a pretty steady rate, and new and promising games continue to hit shelves. Which makes us all wonder if any of them have been truly game-changing. Here are our top picks from 2017: Wizards of the Coast's flagship CCG: Dragons of Tarkir The sheer scale and diversity of Dragons of Tarkir left your biggest rivals in the dust - not a hard feat when Dragons, Warriors and all manner of gods and fey are ruling the skies, seas and earth of the fantastical new world of Tarkir (alongside the familiar continents of Kaladesh and Amonkhet). In the first set the game introduced brand new schools of magic (summoning, rakshasa, aura), new crafts (crafting, mummification, metalcraft) and—inevitably—a new version of a tried and tested trope: the dual mechanic. Dragons of Tarkir brought across a wide variety of extensions and iterations on warlocks' ability to summon new creatures and cast spells: new schools of magic: forbidden, black, dark, searing, red and star conspiracies: Humans-only magic items and the cycle of spells other worldly attachments: familiars, totem animals, landholdings new crafted items: tapping and suppressing abilities new artifacts: summoning spells, scheming items, monstrous beasts situational spell threats: flight rapid deck building: no handcrafted cards, only 'fused' decks as one card can combine with another and the outcome is always unpredictable new fast-paced game environments: a new world of monsters and planes that make them more attractive targets for adventurers new mechanics for more versatility: adding additional factions and factions to war: like merging and wedging, stack-pulsing and combining enemies they also handled the tricky tricky Tome mechanic from Magic the Gathering. While it probably helped that this new mechanic was an attempt to solve the problem of weedy and boring artifact cards and to provide a more streamlined ‘focus on the game’ mechanic, it’s also clear that these mechanics really unlocked the deck-building power of the new players, and new ‘capped♦
