DENVER
(CBS4) — Colorado voters will be able to decide in November whether they want to legalize marijuana. Supporters of Amendment 64 to legalize marijuana for recreational use across the state
started a new campaign called “Yes on 64” that’s building support and

awareness ahead of the election. “Our message is, ‘Yes on 64. It is time to legalize and regulate marijuana,’” said Mason Tvert, co-director of the group. The campaign is focusing on four main points — raising revenue, protecting children from marijuana, the health and safety of those who use marijuana, and keeping the drug out of the hands of children, seniors and people who use it for medical purposes. “If you’re going to legalize marijuana for recreational use, then you have to actually be willing to pay for it,” Tvert said. “We’re not actually going to be doing that. We’re going to be taking our dollars and putting them in a pot of revenue that’s up for grabs.” Opponents of the measure are also running a campaign called “No on 64.” “As voters in Colorado, we see that medical marijuana is making strides here to help people who are in need of medical treatment,” said Adam Fulmer, director of Colorado for Patients First. “As voters, we don’t see marijuana as the answer to our economic troubles. We can't just adopt out of thin air a new industry that's going to make us more prosperous," he said. A poll released on Thursday showed that opposition to the amendment is running at about 47 percent to 46 percent. The ad from Yes On 64 noted that the Colorado Office of Economic Development and the

---

Colorado Department of Revenue already are collecting money to deal with the new taxes on marijuana. “The money that we’re taking in is going to the state for a variety of purposes,” Tvert said. “It’s going to education to make our communities safer, it’s going to job training for people who work in this industry, it’s going to

---

paying for law enforcement to help us
keep our communities
