Nefrotica: The Boot Disk With A Map Of Japan A decision that's going to be a difficult one, especially given the fact that the heaviest proponent of a new rule is his insurance carrier - which isn't necessarily the group that's most beneficial to your budget in this situation: Saving money on your auto insurance is a great idea. But one thing to be aware of is that you have to make sure your current insurer won't raise your rates if you switch to a new company. When Consumer Reports tested the top car insurance coverage at 16 companies, it found that even though there were a lot of differences in some companies' rates - $40 or more for some vehicles and $10 or more for others - about a quarter of the companies had a whopping 75 percent of the same vehicles rated at least a "good" or "better" rating. But not all companies have the same problem. While 16% of the companies tested had a minimum of 75% vehicles rated at least a "good" or "better" rating, Consumer Reports found that 7% of them were at least 4% under-pricing the actual cost of a policy. And that brings us to the crux of the matter: the low-cost policy available from Reliance Underwriters. It was ranked low-cost by Consumer Reports, which doesn't just mean that it was the cheapest among the companies tested. It means it was the cheapest - even though it didn't have the cheapest premiums. How low are the prices, you ask? Well, Consumer Reports says it's the lowest out of the 16 companies tested, with a price of $908 for insurance on the top 5 cars tested for collision, comprehensive, and theft. That's cheaper than you'd get a policy for your Volvo and your Hyundai from Geico for $967 or from Independence/Progressive at $983. So what makes this policy so inexpensive? For starters, the company is owner-operated, which means you're talking to the same person face-to-face. Consumer Reports says this works in your favor. Get a quote on your insurance 24/7 We know what you're thinking - "I'd like to get the lowest price possible!" But here's the truth about auto insurance: "lowest price possible" is actually the high price for your insurance - particularly in light of the fact that your rates are likely to rise in the next six months. e79caf774b

We're the nation with the highest number of gun owners per capita. But that doesn't mean that the majority of us are keen to see the government expanding its power by coming for more than just the most dangerous weapons. As gun ownership increases, support for the government possessing firearms has declined, with more people supporting expanded government control of guns than guns in general. That's the finding of a new paper published this week in the Journal of Political Economy. "The American people are gradually warming up to the notion of the national government keeping track of their guns," the researchers write. "This is a dramatic change from earlier decades, when we might have imagined our government keeping an eye on ours." The researchers, Jay Petersen of Loyola College (Illinois) and Daniel Rinberg of Cornell University, start their paper by noting that the US doesn't have as large an armed population as we used to, largely because those whose weapon ownership was more than incidental have done away with them. At the same time, the number of hunters is very high. With those two facts in mind, the authors set out to determine whether the public is generally in favor of broad gun control and if so, whether the public's growing support for guns is the result of the growing
