Speakers will address the contentious end-of-the-world scenarios that are often generated by news of the Mayan calendar's impending end in 2012. The program will feature three panel discussions, with an intermission featuring the main session speakers. All panelists will be drawn from different academic disciplines. The first panel, "What are the Actual Possibilities?" will address the reality of end-of-the-world scenarios. Speakers will examine end-of-the-world scenarios that occurred in the past, and discuss whether these scenarios were founded on actual reality or mythology. They will also consider the impact on our culture if real apocalyptic events occurred. The second panel, "The Issues: Will the Media and Entertainment Industry Play a Role?" will examine the potential impact of global economic, environmental, societal and political upheaval on the imaginary "doomsday clock" (see image at right). The panelists will discuss the role of the media in end-of-the-world scenarios, and they will examine issues related to science, technology, medicine, economics and the arts. The third panel, "Public Perception: Recognizing and Coping with Irrationalities," will focus on how members of the public accept predictions of the end of the world. The panelists will examine how people are influenced by their belief systems and the media, and they will discuss how end-of-the-world scenarios can serve as a wake-up call to the need for social reform. The first panel discussion will begin at 7 p.m. and conclude by 9:30 p.m. A second panel discussion will begin at 10:30 p.

New York health officials warn that the state's coronavirus data are being skewed by mistakes and delays in testing. On Thursday, Gov. Andrew Cuomo said the death toll due to the disease had increased by 205, and the result of a re-analysis. There were 3,529 patients hospitalized, including 2,034 in intensive care units, as of Thursday morning, Cuomo said. The governor said the state did 4,100 tests on Thursday, but the real number of tests performed may be double that.
