Mantoux intradermal tests were performed in 940 patients coming from three countries in the Maghreb: Tunisia, Morocco and Algeria. A significant difference was observed for tuberculin skin test (P Single-center experience with bilateral salvage esophageal surgery. Bilateral esophageal carcinomas frequently present a challenging clinical situation. Recent reports suggest that bilateral cancer resections are more effective than unilateral procedures and that salvage procedures can be safe and effective. The aim of this study was to report our single-center experience with bilateral esophageal cancer. We retrospectively analyzed the data of 41 patients (30 men and 11 women; mean age, 65 years) with bilateral esophageal carcinomas who underwent salvage esophagectomies from 1990 to 2004. Patients were categorized based on the timing of the first operation (Group I: within 3 months, Group II: 3-12 months after completion of primary surgery, and Group III: >12 months after completion of primary surgery) and according to the histologic type of the second
