The present invention relates to an improved solid-state body, which comprises a silicon-containing silicon carbide mixture and to a process for its preparation. The production of solid-state bodies, in particular, ceramics, from a silicon-containing silicon carbide mixture is known. One such process has been disclosed in U.S. Pat. No. 5,266,319 (Izumi et al.), in which a ternary starting material, composed of silicon, carbon and aluminum, is reacted at a temperature between 1,600 and 2,500.degree. C. in an atmosphere of hydrogen or nitrogen, or both. The starting material may comprise an already-prepared SiC powder, which is reacted in a reactor with hydrogen at a temperature of 1,600-2,500.degree. C., which results in the formation of a solid-state body. A further process for preparing solid-state bodies, in particular, glass-ceramics, from silicon-containing silicon carbide mixtures is known from U.S. Pat. No. 4,485,028 (Meynaud et al.), which also relates to a ternary starting material composed of silicon, carbon and aluminum. A reactor is used, which is filled with a porous body composed of aluminum and silicon nitride. On the top of the reactor, a mixture of silicon powder and carbon powder is placed. This mixture is heated with an electric heating element at a temperature between 1,000 and 2,500.degree. C., whereupon the reactant and the porous body are subjected to a controlled gas flow. According to U.S. Pat. No. 4,485,028, it is possible to prepare a ceramic body
