Apropos of a case]. The authors report the case of a splenic artery aneurysm observed in a young patient with severe haemolytic anemia (HAS). The clinical diagnosis was based on the presence of recurrent episodes of hypovolaemic shock, thrombocytopenia and anemia. Surgical management consisted of splenectomy and aneurysmectomy. This diagnosis was confirmed by the demonstration of a saccular lesion at the level of the first part of the splenic artery. This case illustrates the occurrence of a congenital haemolytic anemia in association with an acquired aneurysm of the splenic artery. A review of the literature shows that this association is exceptional. The Authors discuss the physiopathologic mechanisms that could be involved in this disorder.For the past eight years, the number of calls to Florida's Department of Law Enforcement on suicide prevention has steadily declined. In the year ending Oct. 31, 2016, the agency received about 2,200 calls. Last year, that number was less than 1,800. "The number of calls were down, but that's not the same as a decrease in the number of people who are calling," said Tanya Arias, the department's director. The state doesn't know how many people are seeking help for depression or suicide. But the agency has seen fewer calls. "And that's good. When people are not calling, they're not in crisis, they're going about their lives," said Dr. Robert Schulman, the chief medical officer at St. Mary's Medical Center, the only hospital that receives calls to the agency. It's hard to get an accurate picture of how many people are killing themselves in Florida, mainly because there's no nationwide database for such numbers. " ca3bfb1094
