Firebug though, has also it's problems though. It doesn't give me enough information about the javascript I'm rendering (I mean it's not easy to tell whether something is js-rendered or not) and the JS console shows only the js I'm rendering. Is there some way to make Firebug show only js-rendered content, maybe in a separate tab? A: For your information, Firebug can display the render process, as explained in Put the "inspector" pane inside a event handler, see "Firebug and DHTML". Use a "live reload" capability, see "Live reload in Firebug". Q: Spring MVC form submission crashes app. Rest assured not validating values when making a POST request Why is Rest Assured not picking
