Attack on Pearl Harbor or the Battle of Pearl Harbor, formerly known as the Attack on the Pearl Harbor Navy Yard, was an attack on the United States Navy's naval base at Pearl Harbor, Honolulu, Hawaii, by the Imperial Japanese Navy during the Pacific War of World War II on December 7, 1941, the first day of the Pacific portion of World War II. The attack included a surprise, unprovoked attack by naval air forces and torpedo planes on United States military facilities at Pearl Harbor, including four battleships, a heavy cruiser, and two destroyers. The attack was intended to draw the United States into a larger war in the Pacific, and eliminate a threat to the Japanese empire. The attack left more than 2,400 Americans dead, including the U.S. Navy's commander in chief, Adm. Husband E. Kimmel. Japanese casualties are estimated at several hundred. The attack also damaged or destroyed nearly 18,000 buildings and 1,100 aircraft, and caused severe damage to or loss of several aircraft carriers, battleships, cruisers, and destroyers

Multiparametric flow cytometry for the characterization of rare populations of cells in the peripheral blood of patients with acute lymphoblastic leukemia. Using multiparametric flow cytometry (MFC) to characterize the immune cells of the peripheral blood of 40 children with acute lymphoblastic leukemia (ALL), we found, in most cases, the expected pattern of negative staining for mature T and B lymphocyte markers, an increased proportion of immature T and B cell markers and fewer B lymphocytes with decreased immunoglobulin CD23 antigen. In the majority of cases, although the absolute number of peripheral blood lymphocytes was normal, the lymphocyte subsets had a lower
