This paper reports on a year-long audit of clinical, administrative and managerial staff in a managed mental health trust in Yorkshire, focussing on the use of the Mental Health Nursing Information System (CHIME) and The Right Care, Right Time Training programme, the former of which is relevant to primary mental health care. The results show that the majority of staff found CHIME to be useful. A range of benefits to all staff was reported, although these were more prominent in general care and higher in grade staff, with benefits to .The federal government is preparing to take over Vancouver island, from Richmond south to Victoria, with its "No Surrender" control of the Emergency Management BC program. Dr. Peter Harder,

Canada's minister of health, says more will be announced tomorrow. (CBC) There are no details yet of how the federal government will take over the rural program. The program was set up after the B.C. disaster in Clearwater, B.C., when a pipeline ruptured in 2009, releasing crude oil and spewing it across the mountainside into the community. The program was meant to be a partnership between the provincial government and first responders, but the Rural Municipalities of Island East and Island County said earlier this year the program wasn't doing enough to meet their community safety needs. The Rural Municipalities of Island East and Island County said earlier this year the program wasn't doing enough to meet their community safety needs. (CBC) Dr. Peter Harder, the federal health minister, said in a recent news conference he wanted to implement a control and improve the operation. With the federal funding and provincial staff, "we have the opportunity for tremendous improvements," he said. Island County's commissioner Ken Gillespie said he has heard nothing from the province about what's happening and he has also heard nothing from the federal government about how they plan to replace the province. He said Island East and Island County wanted more hands on the program and wanted the federal government to pay the bulk of the program costs — not just the province. "What we don't have right now is political goodwill — that said, 'We'll give you all the money you need and you'll keep it.'" Gillespie said he thinks the province is holding back because they don't want to raise taxes and that's what they've been promising to Islanders. Gillespie told CBC News the RCMP have been saying all along that the province is going to stay and run the program, but he still doesn't know if that's true. Gillespie said there are approximately 100 people in the program, with probably another 100 to 150 needed in the future to do the work in both areas. He estimated the annual budget is about $350,000. "I've got a few people that are starting to look for work right now," he said. He said that, as of now, he doesn't know who in his new administration will have the 6d1f23a050
