Aldosterone-producing adenoma is a common cause of hypertension. The prevalence of diabetes in patients with aldosteronism is higher than in the general population. However, there are few reports of hyperinsulinemia in aldosterone-producing adenoma after successful surgical ablation. We present two cases with hyperinsulinemia in aldosterone-producing adenoma after successful surgical ablation. After surgery, blood glucose levels decreased and maintained normal range despite decreased serum sodium concentration. Plasma level of insulin was elevated. Blood glucose may be compensated by hyperinsulinemia to maintain normal blood glucose concentrations in aldosterone-producing adenoma after surgical ablation. Hyperinsulinemia may be, therefore, a good marker for successful surgical ablation of aldosterone-producing adenoma. * o (w) . C a l c 6d1f23a050
