Some time ago, I was contacted by a company called Softimage customer support asking for the review of the newest version of Photoshop CS6® and the site asked me for the review. It was one of the most dramatic and astounding experiences. The company has its own implementation of the product and they have to certify it. Recently, I had a strange experience: downloaded a copy of the trial version that had leaked on the Internet, and only knew how to use. It is a product that almost all producers of images use. As long as you have the limited version of the product, there is no light, no colors, the interaction between elements, the simulations and the effects are limited. For me, I have been using Photoshop CS6 since the beginning of 2011 and the last update I got my hands on the final version of the program. Since version CS5, the pre-launch had many more surprises and innovations for all users. The lightroom was also integrated into Photoshop is not locked in any way. The CS5 was one of the best versions of the plug-in. Two great innovations were made: pre-visualization and real time preview. With pre-visualization, you can preview the image that you will eventually save in the computer and modify it as you like, knowing that Photoshop will always have the new status of the elements in order to patch them. In real time preview, you can see a preview of the final image at the same time as you change it, much as you would preview in the browser, allowing you to see immediately how changes affect your digital image. The collaboration of photographers is also improved. They will be able to see in real time how the photo you select is modified by the group they select. The ability to make changes to the image immediately and collaborate more efficiently is extremely important for photographers and for the creation of the image.

The Dashboard will display information about the tool and the tool's external state, such as the selection it is active with, its size, and the path it's making. The Fill tool allows us to fill an area with a specific color. It is most commonly used for creating intricate backgrounds or for coloring large areas (think of a baseball field in winter, for example), but can also be used for other purposes, such as making a person's skin look red. The Paint Bucket tool is a rapid way to paint large areas of an image. This is ideal for painting out entire backgrounds or for coloring large areas. You can also use the Gradient tool above it to create different shades and colors. Curves: Adjust the brightness and contrast of an image equally, or selectively, without using the HSL sliders. Curves can be used on their own either to increase or decrease the levels of an image, using other tools such as the Offset tool.
