A function foo() is used to generate a random number once, for its return value, and then never called again. Given the following code, does this code use a non-synchronized hash table? Is there a requirement for the hash table to be synchronized? Is this code thread-safe?

```
int foo() { // read hash table int hash = 0; // Lock the hash table if necessary while (usedHashTable[hash]) { lockHashTable(); } hash = randomHash(); usedHashTable[hash] = true; // Lock the hash table if necessary while (!usedHashTable[hash]) { lockHashTable(); } // return random number return randomNumber; }

 If the function is not thread safe, what changes would need to be made to make the function safe? A: As others have mentioned, an unsynchronized hash table is inadvisable in production code. I'll point out that your function is incorrect in the following sense: you're re-initializing your hash every time it is called. This could explain some of your symptoms. In your example, you might instead set your seed like so:

// This is called only once per program execution, and // it will always give you the same result Seeding a random number generator And use this form: int foo() { // read hash table int hash = 0; // Lock the hash table
