The team also expects other Mac-based programs to use these apps, too—Photoshop will be available in the Mac App Store in December—so iOS devices and tablets may carry an Adobe Photoshop update sooner than you may expect. So with all these apps and updates, are there any programs that are still missing? And of course, the question is, does Photoshop have a future? And we know that the answer is yes, so we have to ask: What will that future look like? For me, the future will probably look more like Lightroom, and it has improved the usability of Photoshop to help you do the things most often used in darkroom printing on the PC. Again, this toolset also lets you edit RAW files with any of the other photo editing programs. This is a true leap forward from the old days on Photoshop, When you have a finished image to share, it is much easier to work in a stable environment, or to set up print jobs on a print server. From a web-based editing tool, you see the whole image and your changes immediately. It might not look exactly like the image you are viewing, but it's easier for you to see the whole image at one glance, as opposed to working with a bunch of layers. Now that's a view that's more akin to the old days of film, where you could look at a negative in a projection booth, adjusting the light for DR, and once the image was perfect, pressing the print button. In the earlier iterations of Creative Cloud I wasn't as impressed with their updated rendering engine as I was with the new tools. I did notice a lot of improvements - I still have Adobe Lightroom 5.5.8 on my system with Capture and Lightroom on my main computer back then. Even back then I noticed Adobe was working hard on improving the rendering.

One of the biggest changes in the 2023 release of Photoshop is the transition to the new native GPU API for all the creative applications. That's because this change will allow the applications to be built with the full power of modern graphics in mind. The GPU API will allow our applications to scale better across scalars and UIs, bring more of our productivity and creative workflows to the digital darkroom, and bring the user experience to life across a wider range of graphics capable hardware. Photoshop Elements will support the GPU API by 2022 to keep its 21st century UI and performance while working within the limitations of the API. The best software is the one that improves productivity, the Photoshop update is no different. We are excited about introducing the new Photoshop to web designers and creators. The new Photoshop features, capabilities and tools aim to meet the needs and demands of web professionals.
