All of them focus on wine. For about a year now, my personal flavor has been a bit of an acquired taste. If I buy something because of the promise of great wine and I drink, say, a nice glass of cabernet, I'm usually pretty happy with it. But the same thing can't always be said of me when it comes to beer. Often, it's watery, cheap lager. I've read that to be fair, that all beer is a compromise of several ingredients; at the same time, I may have no idea what I'm missing. It was out of this spirit of compromise that the podcast started. This was my way of trying to, you know, not like beer. To my ear, the first two podcasts lack the delightful quirk of being as scripted as a radio episode. They're a bit more natural and the conversations are more lively. However, as I listen to the second one, I feel a little bit guilty for liking it because it seems like such a well-intentioned effort and I don't want to be disrespectful. But the way it's laid out, you can do no wrong with it. (There's also a third podcast, but I'm not going to tell you about it because I'm sure you'd throw a fit if I did.) In a way, this tells me that this approach isn't the best way to listen to the genre. But there's no way around
