The site has reached a good steady state at the moment and the site itself (and if you are an avid follower of our blog, then you probably know this already) visited by thousands of people per month. In addition to the site, the project has grown substantially with almost 400 members of their facebook community who make and post visual art work via the site. With this latest stage of the project we are trying something a little unusual. We are releasing a public beta version of the site, despite the fact that we don't have any of the final art to show off. This is because there is a lot more going on with the main site, which we plan to release to the world in the latter stage of 2017. The site is set to be fully functional following the coming web standard of HTTP/2, a move that should make the site even faster than it is already.

This year, Photoshop developers have made the AI accessible to all. Earlier this week the update was announced and we will have to see it in action in early April, but here are the details. The new feature will allow you to choose images you want Sensei to look at. When you choose a portrait, for example, the software will use the face as a reference.
